Whether you believe in the existence of a hidden spiritual reality or not, you will probably find the accounts of these researchers more than a little compelling. The ultimate evaluation though, as always, remains with you.

ANGELS AND ALIENS: The Fall of Man
Adrian Gilbert

This lecture by Adrian Gilbert, standing at a podium and showing slides, is the first in a new series of his, which he is calling, 'Angels and Aliens'. He explains the title: "This gives us a sort of rough area of work within, but each lecture is going to be on different subjects. I want to cover the whole gamut of understanding and investigation and theories concerning everything that we think of as angels and what we associate with being aliens, and how there could be any sort of linkage between the two concepts."

Atlantis Rising has carried many of Gilbert's books over the years: The Orion Mystery, Secrets of the Stone of Destiny, Magi: The New Jerusalem, among others, and most recently, Blood of Atalaya. For those not familiar with him, in his biography, you would find:

His field of interest is ancient mysteries, mysticism, alternative history, and self-development. He has been researching these subjects for over forty years now and not without result. And when he says research, he does mean just that, he says. He deplores, he says, the plethora of superficial trash that gets churned out every year in this genre, most of which only serves to inflate the egos of the authors and further confuse the reader. He is, he says, a scientist at heart. He studied Chemistry and Physics at University, and though a

Leo, he has Virgo as his rising sign. Astrologers, he says, won't be surprised to hear that he likes to be his own boss (Leo) or that he is fanatically picky when it comes to research (Virgo). He used to be a computer analyst/Programmer, and though he does his best to hide the scaffolding, his books tend to be highly structured. He is not one who writes a sentence once and that is what gets published. He writes, re-writes, writes again, shifts paragraphs, changes orders of chapters, deletes large chunks, and generally worries his books to "near-death" before he feels comfortable releasing them to the people who really matter—his readers. Gilbert wants us to know he is also someone who cares very much about the truth. We all have opinions and theories about ancient mysteries, and that is fine, he allows. However, the scientist in him (Saturn rising) demands that before he presents a, possibly controversial, theory he must first get his facts straight. He likes to visit the places he writes about, reads as much as possible about the subject, and then presents what he hopes will be useful new insights. Of course he is not the pope, and not infallible, but he does try to get his facts straight even though, he admits, this can make writing more difficult and tedious than if he told lies, pretending that these had been "channeled" to him by some mysterious entity.

That is not to say he does not believe in the divine. He does. He has had many mysterious and even miraculous experiences on his journey. Some he recounts in his books though there is much more that he has yet to tell. He is absolutely convinced that this world is far more mysterious and interesting than contemporary culture credits. He also "knows" that humans are not just biological machines that live, die, and temporarily inhabit bodies for the purpose of experience and also to carry out necessary tasks in the material world. Individually and collectively we are evolving but this is not a matter of blind chance. We are where we are because of the interaction between mind and matter within the zone of time and space. Yet in our innermost self we are sparks of divinity that are neither born nor die. He learnt this, he says, when he was 21 and practicing yoga. If you don't believe this, then he is sorry. You will have to follow the path yourself if you want proof.
